The homogentisate-spirochaetal (Hgs) choline production pathway has been characterized in bacteria. Here, it was found that in the hyper-choline-producing strain of Brevibacterium lactofermentum there was not only the Hgs choline production pathway but also the key intermediate homogentisate. Because of the involvement of this pathway in the production of polyprenylated aromatic compounds, its importance was examined. Ectopic expression of the homogentisate pathway clearly enhanced the choline productivity of the strain. This is the first time that a heterologous choline production pathway has been found to function in an Hgs-producing bacterium.Q: Mysql query gives segmentation fault I am stuck on a segmentation fault error while executing the following query.
