"We are thrilled to apply our HyperMotion Technology to FIFA 22 to deliver an improved gameplay experience," said Craig E. Heavey, Executive Producer on FIFA. "Through real-life data and machine learning, we have managed to enhance players' intelligence and, to make them feel even more alive, we have also focused on the psychology and demands of players to be successful." HyperMotion Technology changes how players control the ball by allowing the ball to behave like real-life players: players get on the ball sooner, more consistently, and with more variety. As the ball is played, the player feels and sees the momentum of the ball change, reacting to the movement of the ball, the player's body and the play. HyperMotion Technology helps players understand when and how to beat an opponent, by offering a "clear-cut" alternative in decision-making. In addition, the movement of the ball is much more true to life, ensuring a fluid, unpredictable and engaging experience. The HyperMotion engine on FIFA 22 uses motion capture data collected from 22 matches in motion capture suits and biomechanics labs. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power gameplay. "The HyperMotion engine on FIFA 22 relies on the real life gameplay data collected from the real-life matches to capture the movement of real-life players while they were playing," said Jay Usher, Lead Engineer on FIFA. "The research team worked diligently to develop a robust technology engine that is both accurate and robust to represent the movement of real-life players from a wide variety of different player types." "To the best of our knowledge, our research team has been the first to use real-life gameplay data to power a video game," said Ned Schwartzman, Head of Research at the Siggraph 2018 conference in Montreal. "We are thrilled to be using our work at that conference to bring this cutting-edge technology to the market." The work at the Siggraph 2018 conference has inspired us to rethink our core algorithm with the goal of delivering a new level of realism that is unobtainable with human players alone. Even with the advances in virtual reality we are still limited by the resolution, audio and motion capture constraints that were not available when the research was conducted. This is why we developed
