Its current population is approximately 30. It is located on the road that connects Pitcairn, called the Kingston Highway, and is the most southerly of the inhabited islands in the group. Kieta is only 2,184 ft. long and 934 ft. wide. It lies within the island group of Pitcairn and includes many of the old kauri trees that once grew on Pitcairn but which have since mostly been removed. The only building now standing within the Kieta village is a small chapel, built from Australasian kauri logs. It is still used by the islanders as a place of worship and has an Anglican God and a St. Paul's Anglican Church. The only other buildings are a number of private houses. The name of
