I've tried many different ways, but none of them worked. Here's what I've tried so far: var theTop = window.pageYOffset; var theLeft = window.pageXOffset; var theWidth = $(window).width(); var theHeight = $(window).height(); var theCurrentLocation = $(theTop); var theCurrentLeft = $(theLeft); var theCurrentWidth = $(theWidth); var theCurrentHeight = $(theHeight); var theLocation = body.ownerDocument.defaultView.location(location); var theX = theLocation.x; var theY = theLocation.y; var theWidth = theCurrentWidth; var theHeight = theCurrentHeight; var theNewWidth = theX + theWidth; var theNewHeight = theY + theHeight; var theNewLocation = { x: (theNewWidth / 2), y: theNewHeight / 2 }; Or I tried getBoundingClientRect() var theClientRect = body.getBoundingClientRect(); var theX = theClientRect.left; var theY = theClientRect.top; In all three cases, the result is NaN. How can I get the X and Y coordinates of the Element theBODY? Edit: After researching a bit, I found a similar question in stackoverflow. Thanks a lot to Robin for helping me out, but I don't think my problem is related to the one he faced. A: You need to compare the location and scrollOffset properties of the window, not get the location of the body element, as described in How to get the location of an HTML element in javascript?, there is also a good answer in another question on how to get the location of an element with jQuery. To find the location of an element

Let's say that I want to open an XML file (another file), calculate the total number of occurences of some element (let's say "w" for now), then save it back. I know how to open the file and do some maths, but I don't know how to save the result back to the file. I did something like this in C++, but here I have no idea. #include #include #include int main() { string line; double total = 0; ifstream in("readme.txt"); if(in) { while(in.good()) { getline(in,line); total += strcmp(line.c_str(), "w"); } // save total to file } if(in.fail()) { cerr 6d1f23a050
