A: The command rm works without the files attached to it. removing `--dir=' just removed one directory's contents. Q: How to use enqueue_action inside of a constructor? I need to write some sort of an observer for an event that was triggered by the constructor of a class. My custom event class called "LectureTriggeringEvent" looks like this: class LectureTriggeringEvent{ public function __construct(array $lecture, $now = 'now'){ \DateTime::setTimezone(new \DateTimeZone(date_default_timezone_get())); $this->lecture = $lecture; $this->now = $now; $lectureTriggeringEvent = []; $lectureTriggeringEvent[] = new LectureTriggeringEvent($lecture, $now); } }

In my custom class, I need to use a function called enqueue_action() to append a certain value to a database. So I need to create a proper method inside of the constructor of my custom class, named for example enqueue_custom_action(). This method should contain the code of the mentioned enqueue_action() and the code should then run inside of the constructor. If I use a function like function enqueue_custom_action($action){ enqueue_action('custom_lecture_action', $action); } inside of a custom class, it does just what I need it to do, but I don't really want to write a function inside of the constructor like that. Is there any way to simply use a function like enqueue_action() inside of the constructor? A: Something that comes to mind is using dependency injection. So you define an interface and pass it in the constructor. A very simple way to do this could look like: interface CustomDependencyInterface { public function someCoolFunction(); } class CustomClass { private $dependency; public function __construct(CustomDependencyInterface $dependency) {
