ACMarket APK 4.8.7 Download Latest .Q: Web browser applications vs. desktop application To start off, I am no expert at this so please be gentle. I am being pragmatic. I am trying to build an application for a Windows environment. I use C#. What is the best way to do it. Should I make a desktop application and use web browser to access the application? Or should I make a web application and run it on a web server? My primary concerns are: speed security allow access from anywhere easy to deploy A: Web applications are faster, easier and (usually) more secure. On the other hand, by the time you've made your application web-based you may be able to write it to be more robust and performant. Also, with a desktop application you are more constrained in what you can do. You will have less options in terms of licensing and security, and you will also need a Windows.exe to deploy. It's a matter of time vs. money. The best strategy is to start with a web-based approach and if it's too slow or too clunky add features, then add more features until you find you need desktop functionality. /* * Copyright (C) 2018.
